

1. Don't Be a Wannabe

Don't be a wannabe. Just be a grownup with a purpose. Like Cindy Sherman said, "If life's one big party, sure get drunk as many times as you can."

If life's like a horrible awkward-movie scene where you start off sobbing and end up laughing so hard you feel like you're losing your mind, then you should just close your eyes and settle down. Try not to be a wannabe.

Have a purpose in your life. If you know and love someone, try to give them your full love. Don't let negative pressure or fear of rejection cut a deep cord into your heart.

I wouldn't believe it if I wrote it. The one thing that makes you stand out is how good you ARE at doing something else which is most of the time what sets you aside from the rest of the pack. Besides, if you're not good at something it's OK.

Be somebody. And there ain't a lot you can do about it. #Don't be a wannabe While I'm busy going to parties and taking selfies I'll take this photo back when I was like..... Well.

You want to give? Don't be mad at someone your heart is so full of love for. Don't be mad at yourself for not being happy at the start of life.

Stick to your highest ideals, love everyone in those around you, and, if you have the will, do whatever it takes to stay alive and healthy. A committed soul like me knows that, sooner or later, a wannabe must grow up. The world is your oyster. When it comes to me, it's oyster-y.

I welcome the early days of life when I can go to a party and look for someone to play with a favorite dance partner. That was the life of the young soul. That's why I was so lucky.
